

"JIMMY" WELCH, CLAD IN ARMOUR, IN A COMIC BILLIARDS MATCH.

There was also tea and a concert. Here are some of the audience.

Bert Errol gives a guest a light.

Stevenson blowing up his gloves.

TO TAKE HER BROTHER'S PLACE AT THE LEVERS.

A young employee of the Great Eastern Railway, who was called up for service with the first groups, has been put back until March in order that he may teach his sister how to manage the levers at a level crossing. She will remain in the company's employ until her brother's return.

Mr. Welch has a little practice before the game. He succeeded in making the cannon.

Mr. Welch makes a stroke with his dagger.

To entertain wounded soldiers "Jimmy" Welch, of "When Knights Were Bold" fame, met Stevenson, the famous billiards player, in a match of ten up at the Eccentric Club yesterday. Mr. Welch wore armour and used his dagger as a cue, while his opponent was handicapped by having to wear boxing gloves.—(Daily Mirror photographs.)